Resume

The Lagoon 40 presents a new visual identity that sets it apart from the very first glance. While remaining true to Lagoon's DNA, it adopts a new style with a distinct, clear, and refined design, showcasing its large windows and openness to the outside world. Its chamfer, extending from the stern to the bow, bears witness to its new generation, recognizable at first sight.

On the exterior, the Lagoon 40 offers a spacious and welcoming cockpit open to the sea. A dining table on the port side can accommodate up to twelve guests, and a relaxation area along with seating is also available on the aft beam. The ergonomic helm station, accessible from the cockpit or the deck, fosters smooth communication between the skipper and the crew. The wide aft skirts provide a large swim platform, facilitating access to the dinghy and safe boarding. Additionally, a forward cockpit furnished with a sunbathing area offers extra living space.

The rigging of the Lagoon 40 reflects its new generation and enhanced performance. The VPLP hull and increased sail plan offer a better sail area-to-displacement ratio, making it a fast and seaworthy catamaran. The choice to move the mast aft brings numerous advantages, including a self-tacking jib for ease of maneuvering, a larger foretriangle for more downwind sail options, and a shorter boom for easier handling. The mainsail, with a high aspect ratio, allows for less disturbed air in the upper sections, resulting in improved performance.

On the interior, the Lagoon 40 boasts well-distributed volumes, seamless circulation, and exceptional brightness. The interior design, by Nauta Design, highlights sophisticated materials. It's available in different configurations to meet the needs of owners and larger families, with options for three or four cabins. A new aft cabin featuring a "semi Island bed" and ample storage is introduced. The large hull windows with integrated portholes in the cabins provide exceptional light and magnificent outside views.

With its refined design, enhanced performance, and comfortable interior, the Lagoon 40 offers an unforgettable sailing experience.
